

HISTORY OF THE UMBRELLA.

Its Exact Origin is Unknown, but it is Very Ancient.

No one knows whether the umbrella was originally used as a defense against rain or as a screen from the sun, but it seems probable that the first umbrellas were sunshades. In countries where very little clothing is worn rain does not make much difference, but the sun is a power. Why shouldn't the palm-leaf be the first sunshade, with its ribs and handles to order? It hints at the umbrella as well as the fan.

Travelers among the Ainos of Japan often make temporary sunshades of gigantic dock leaves, which are sometimes six feet high, large enough for an account of Gulliver. The umbrella has a very great antiquity. The word itself means a "little shadow," showing that it was named for its protection from the sun in this case. Horace says:

"Among the military standards the sun beholds an Egyptian canopy."

On coins and in the rock carvings of the ancients the umbrella often shows its familiar form. This goes to prove that Jonas Hanway did not invent the umbrella, but he saw the value of the Eastern sunshade, and soon it became the fashion to carry this article of apparel. There must be a great difference between the umbrella of the eighteenth century and the modern steel-ribbed, silk-covered, slender article which it is regarded as a misfortune to get wet.

The desideratum at present is a portable umbrella. There is a fortune for the man who invents a really good umbrella which can be stowed in a valise or trunk. There is an unpatented Korean umbrella that may fill the bill. When it begins to rain the picturesque and stately Korean well reaches into his sleeve and produces a folded, oiled paper affair resembling a fan. This is spread and set over the hat like an extinguisher, and is kept in place by two strings held under the chin. It is not very large, but anything that will cover a Korean hat will keep the rain from a Korean. Irish Times.

In the Shadow.

See yonder the church in the gloaming,
With towering spire of white,
Like a flash of silver gleaming
On the border edge of night.

And beneath its watchful shadow,
To earth close nestled down,
Is a shining slab of marble,
Or hang by ivy brown.

And the little home so narrow,
In the shadow lies alone—
But a single lot of the "acre"
Is taken for his own.

And it seems so sad and lonely
In the shadow of the tower,
With naught but the murmuring breezes
In the darkening twilight hour.

But we know that our jewel is safest
In the Lord's own tenderest care,
Enwrapped in his temple's shadow,
And fanned by his fragrant air.

WONDERS OF SURGERY.

People Can Live Maimed or Almost Any Other Organ.

The extent to which the body can be mutilated without a fatal result is beyond what most people think. Of course, the Youth's Companion says, the removal of the larger limb is a familiar fact; and, indeed, the successive removal of all the limbs would result in nothing worse than inconvenience. But in the same way internal organs may be extirpated. This is facilitated by their duality.

One eye may be taken out, and the sight remain practically unimpaired. One kidney may be removed, and the other will make up the loss by doing double work. The case is essentially the same when disease has destroyed the functional activity of a kidney; and, therefore, a person in that condition need not be without hope.

In like manner disease may have rendered one lung solid, like liver, and thus functionally useless, and yet the person may live in good health to old age. Could the half-consumed lung of the consumptive only heal up the walls of its great ulcer, and the microbes cease to extend their ravages, the patient might, with care, enjoy a long, useful, and happy life.

Large portions of the brain may be removed with no injury to life or intellect. Persons have lived for years and have been well with bullets in their brain. The liver has been cut in two by tight lacing—the pressure causing an atrophy of the part below—without ending either the life or the folly of the fashionable devotee.

A portion of the intestines has been cut out and the severed ends sewed together, and their normal action and function have not been interfered with. And what seems more amusing, dogs have had their entire stomachs extirpated without impairing indigestion.

Recently a man 57 years old had a large portion of his stomach cut out in consequence of a tumor. The piece was nearly a foot square. The discovered parts were sewed together and the patient ate a dinner of hash twelve days after the operation and was dismissed cured at the end of three weeks. Five months later he was presented before the medical society of Vienna—wholly well, with no trace of the return of the cancerous disease and with digestion perfectly performed.

Some experts are led to think that the stomach plays a secondary part as a digestive organ, its chief service according to this view, being that of a temporary receptacle.
